

Interpretative Developer

Paid 3 month internship

Based in Waterloo, central London; KCA London delivers compelling and meaningful audience experiences. Our services range from designing interactive galleries for museums and visitor centers, through to operational planning and staff training. We work worldwide, across cultures and in partnership with our clients and their communities.

The opportunity

We have an internship opportunity starting in November 2018, for an aspiring and enthusiastic Interpretative Developer keen to develop a career in exhibition design and audience experience.

Joining initially on a 3-month paid internship, you will be active in supporting a close knit growing team and learning the ropes of our industry.

Working as part of the Interpretative team, your main role will be to support the masterplanning and design of a range of visitor experiences (both gallery and event-based) through content research and the development of interpretative strategies and plans. The work will include supporting the team in the development of client reports and deliverables, and in the winning of new business.

This role would suit a confident, inquisitive, highly-organised person; an excellent communicator, who is conscientious, detail oriented, and able to work to deadlines.

Our work includes both cultural and science based projects and are often focussed on the development of young people. We are therefore looking for interns from either arts, humanities or science backgrounds, who can demonstrate experience and/or skills in interpretation, communication or learning.

We are currently working on several major projects in China, Saudi Arabia, Dubai, Kuwait and Qatar, Arabic language skills would be an advantage but are not essential.

More about working at KCA London

As a business, we respect plain speaking, and the people that thrive here are those that can clearly demonstrate that they are ready to embark on a fascinating career and use this opportunity to learn. The ability to grasp new skills quickly and show initiative is always recognised and rewarded.

Working for KCA London is hugely rewarding. Not only do we have a friendly, open, and collaborative environment, every day is different and the work is genuinely interesting. The people that work here are highly adaptable and relish the challenge of being involved in thinking about complex interpretative challenges of complex interpretation and design. We pride ourselves on our ability to deliver influential work and this is possible because we have committed and open-minded employees who are willing to brave new territory and deliver above client expectations.

More about the role

We are currently in a period of growth: expanding our offer on several fronts, and finding ever more powerful ways of delivering services to our clients. To achieve this, we are currently offering valuable paid internships to ambitious and talented graduates with the aim that they can join our team permanently.

KCA London is committed to rewarding all our staff with pay that reflects the responsibilities they are asked to undertake.

As a successful business, we are fully committed to our internship program and are growing fast so it is highly likely that both these internships will convert into permanent roles after the initial 3-month period.

Specific duties for the role will include

- Researching exhibit and event ideas and museum best practice.
- Taking a proactive content research role.
- Conducting and commissioning market and audience research.
- Working with the project team to develop project messages and outcomes.
- Developing experience and exhibit ideas and concepts.
- Developing client and audience facing materials.
- Briefing and collaborating with the project design teams.
- Supporting the project management of projects, including maintaining filing systems, co-ordinating meetings and taking meeting notes.
- Supporting the Business Development team to maintain marketing materials, pitch for new project and develop new business relationships.

How to apply

We are looking for candidates who can start in November 2018.

To apply, please email jobs@kcalondon.com attaching your CV and covering letter (please attach both documents separately to the main body of the email). We would like you to outline your academic
